Introducing the Pharmacy Services Organization

The end user healthcare payer needs to employ the best possible solutions....today. However, in order to execute the best possible solution, healthcare organizations need:

- A tactical implementation team that can leverage economies of skill and scale by taking on planning, implementation, and operational responsibilities for materials management
- A strategic business services team that can build not individual projects but integrated supply side solutions focused on operational bottom line results while integrating best practices.

These capabilities, however, are not commodities; they can't be ordered from a catalog. The only way a company can realize the hard value in outsourcing is to forge a durable, long-lasting relationship with a trusted services provider that possesses the industry knowledge and skill sets to allow success. The new pharmaceutical supply chain advisory firm manifesto still has the CEO and CFO swinging the clubs, but now with expert help at their sides.
